

Jamie A. Khan

Jamie principally practices in the areas of commercial litigation, business litigation, tort cases, environmental permitting litigation, administrative law, tort cases, zoning litigation, and general trial and appellate law. Although primarily a litigator, Jamie enjoys representing businesses in an advisory capacity and frequently works in the area of business entity formation. Jamie was raised in New Jersey, but moved to Charleston, S.C. when he entered The Citadel.

Following graduation from The Citadel, Jamie became a patrolman with the Charleston Police Department. Soon thereafter, Jamie was promoted to a detective position where he investigated a wide range of crimes and incidents for the City of Charleston.

Jamie is active with the Young Lawyers Division of the S.C. Bar and serves on the local Board of Directors for the March of Dimes. Jamie lives in Mt. Pleasant with his wife, Beth, and daughter, Katie.
